

The picture above shows a prototype of a music product. The electronics consists of a flash microcontroller, a USB interface chip and not much else, apart from 21 connectors! The unit measures distance with an ultrasonic ranging mechanism and converts this information into control data for musical sound generators.